Wool Sales—The sale and shipments of wool have been slow this season, according to a local woolman, because of the low ebb in the wool market, and also the desire of sheepmen to get their ewes and lambs to good summer ranges immediately.

Spanish War Veterans—The Spanish War Veterans will hold their annual convention Sunday, at the Union Labor hall, on Twenty-fourth street.
The business meeting which will be followed by a reception and banquet will be attended by 75 members of the organization from Salt Lake, including some of the soldiers from Fort Douglas. Department Commander Elmer Johnson will be the toastmaster.

Condemnation—In the case of the Oregon Short Line against Robert S.
Fletcher et al. the final order for condemnation has been signed by other.

Storm—At 5 o'clock this morning the temperature dropped to 48 degrees above zero and during last night sleepers were comfortable with a good supply of covering. But little rain fell in the city during the night but frequent showers have paid their visits during the day clarifying the atmosphere and giving new life to vegetation. The rain is much needed and the farmers are rejoicing.

Bachelor of Science—Law Wyatt Beason of Ogden received the degree

TWO EASTERN MAYORS GO TO WESTERN SCHOOL TO LEARN HOW TO RUN A CITY

Mayor Rudolph Blankenburg (left) and Mayor William Riddle.

Mayor Blankenburg of Philadelphia, several of his cabinet, nearly a hundred members of the City club of Philadelphia, and Mayor Riddle of Atlantic City, spent the last three days of last week as students at the University of Wisconsin. They took a course in municipal economy and report that they picked up many ideas as to how to run a city government.

INNOCENCE WAS PROVED

The Paris papers are reprinting the story of the famous Lafarge murder case on account of the Senate commission under the presidency of Louis Martin, which is bent on obtaining a judicial revision of the verdict which seventy-two years ago convicted Mme. Lafarge of having poisoned her husband with arsenic. As has been stated by cable the "new fact" necessary for a reopening of the case was only recently discovered in the Pasteur Institute.

Gabriel Bertrand, professor at the Sorbonne and director of biological chemistry at the Pasteur Institute, recently proved that not only does arsenic exist in all organisms, but that the methods hitherto employed for determining the presence of arsenic in any body actually have the effect of introducing arsenic into that body.

It is on this new chemical discovery that M. Martin sounds his claim for the revision of the trial of Mme.
Lafarge. In whose innocence her advocates, the afterward famous M.
Lachaud, to the end professed unal-tering belief.

"She guilty!" he would say: "that charming and noble woman! No, thrice no! Say rather that she was the victim of fates blinder and more cruel than those of Sophocles or Aeschylus!"

And till old age overtook him, the great advocate failed to lay a yearly offering of flowers on the grave of his client.

Compared With Dreyfus Case.
No element of romance was lacking in this, the most famous case, with the exception of the Dreyfus affair of the last century, which split French society into two opposing camps—the Lafargistes and the anti-Lafargistes. Mme. Lafarge nee Capelle, belonged to the highest ranks of Parisian society. Early left an orphan, she was brought up by her aunt, Baroness Ecart, wife of a governor of the Bank of France. At 18 she was married to M. Lafarge, an ironmaster, reputed a man of wealth.
The marriage was, as it could not be, an unhappy one.

Mme. Lafarge, vibrant with "sensibility," and steeped in the romanticism of her time was very unexpectedly yoked with her affectionate but rather boorish husband. There was another grievance, too. The famous and much-vaunted chateau of M. Lafarge appeared to the young Parisienne but a gloomy barracks. Provincial society bored her to tears, and soon the whole neighborhood knew that things were not going well with the new marriage.

Within a year of the marriage Lafarge, whose affairs were not prospering, went to Paris to raise a loan.
In his absence his wife had her portrait painted, placed it in a bag with some cakes made, according to her testimony, by her mother-in-law, and sent the package to Paris. After having eaten one of the cakes Lafarge was taken violently ill with severe internal pains. He returned to his country place a fortnight later, still weak. Once he was at home his illness took a turn for the worse, and he was compelled to keep his bed.

The doctors disagreed in their diagnosis. A week later he died.

Accused Daughter-in-Law.

Round the deathbed suspicions gathered above all in the heart of the sick man's mother. The chateau, like many old houses, was infested with rats. With bitter surmise Madame Lafarge, Sr., recalled how her daughter-in-law on December 12th and January 5th and 10th sent a servant to purchase arsenic in large quantities. The dates tallied with the crises of her son's illness. She accused her daughter-in-law, and a few weeks later the widow appeared in the dock on the charge of murder.

Much was in her favor—her youth, her beauty, her pleading eyes; much, too, against her—her nonchalance, the occasional flippancy of her defense.
"What were you doing that afternoon at 4 o'clock?" asked the prosecuting counsel. "Taking tea," was the answer.

"At that hour?" this incredulously only to provoke the answer, exasperating in the last degree to a provincial jury. "Don't you know, my dear sir, that every one who is anybody in Paris takes tea at that hour?"

But it was not this pose of hers after all, but the evidence of the expert Orfila that proved fatal. Orfila stated that he had found arsenic in the body of the dead man, and from this fact deduced the culpability of the accused. The expert's conclusion was traversed by the great French chemist, Raspail, who undertook, literally post haste, the journey to Paris, where the trial was being held, to give his evidence in person. But some fifty miles from his destination, feeling ill, he stopped at an inn, intending to rest for an hour.

There the rumor reached that Mme.
Lafarge had been acquitted, and thinking his presence no longer necessary, he remained at the inn for the night. Next day he arrived—an hour too late. The accused had been found guilty and condemned to penal servitude for life. The sentence was afterward commuted and Mme. Lafarge released, but shortly after she died.

Then it was that Raspail wrote to the president of the Assizes the famous phrase, "Lend me what you will, even the chair in which you sit, and I warrant I'll find arsenic in it." A wild statement it seemed sixty years ago, but now its truth is established.

PUSHES FIGHT FOR ARMOR PLATE PLANT

Senator Ashurst.

Senator Ashurst of Arizona is putting up a game fight in the upper house of congress for the passage of his bill providing for a governmental armor plate plant. The government, he says, can easily make its own plate for half what is now paid. The bill calls for an appropriation of $1,500,000.

BIRTHDAY PARTY

The fourth birthday anniversary of little Virginia Christenson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Christenson, was celebrated Monday afternoon when ten happy children joined in merry games and songs and riotous war dances on the lawn after partaking of a dainty luncheon prepared and served by Mrs. Christenson, assisted by Mrs. Anna Christenson, Mrs. Cowan, Mrs. Bartonek, Mrs. Bowe and Mrs. Courtier.

The rooms were prettily decorated in blue and white and the dining table with its decorations of blue and white, and its loads of dainty confections, presented a pretty scene encircled by so many sweet, happy faces. The centerpiece, a large glass globe with decorations of blue and white, beneath which were cunningly hidden a variety of little hoes, rakes, shovels and other garden implements to each of which was attached a long blue ribbon streamer, extending to each plate, the children drawing forth with a chubby hand the little favor at the end of their ribbon. Cute little Indian war bon-nets were also laid at each plate and these were worn with great delight by the little guests during the remainder of the afternoon.

The big birthday cake with its adornments and four little candles, dainty and appetizing confections and the pretty little individual cake bearing the initial of each child made the luncheon hour especially attractive.

Those participating were: Clellis Blackham, Floyd Bartonek, June Geiger, Clyde Cowan, Luella Bowe, Ronald Bothwell, Inez Courtier, Aston Petty, Virginia Christenson and Baby Don Christenson.

Mrs. T. A. Mathews and Mrs. Ruth Stevens, called during the festivities to offer little gifts with birthday congratulations.

The little hostess received many pretty gifts from her little guests and also from distant friends.
